profile

Chris K Kim is a Toronto-based digital media designer with an affinity for a minimalist approach to motion and web design.

A graduate of Ryerson University's Radio and Television Arts program and the subsequent master's degree program, Chris has been working in collaboration with a variety of Canadian and international institutions including Ryerson University, Bell Media, and Oxfam International as a digital media consultant. His personal projects also have been recognized on campus as well as in the industry via numerous awards, publications, and exhibitions.

Chris currently works as a freelance web consultant for numerous clients, while teaching various digital media courses at OCAD University, Ryerson University, and Durham College.

An avid listener of jazz and bossa nova music, Chris finds inspiration from works of artists like Paul Rand, Saul Bass, and Piet Mondrian – and strives to achieve balance between form, function, and context.
